Partnership

Many different forms of living together are accepted in Switzerland. In order to get married one must be at least 18 years old. Both spouses have equal rights.

Living Together

The forms in which people live together have changed greatly throughout the past centuries in Switzerland. Many unmarried couples live together (cohabitation, Konkubinatsgemeinschaft) and have children together. There is no set division of roles between the partners (male/female). Same-sex partnerships are accepted and treated as legally equivalent.

Marriage

In Switzerland, one must be 18 years old in order to get married. Same-sex couples can also get married. People wishing to get married must contact the registry office (Zivilstandsamt). The Basel-Landschaft registry office is located in Arlesheim. It initiates the marriage preparation procedure. This involves examining whether the requirements for marriage are met. After the procedure has been completed, the wedding must take place within three months. The registry office offers more detailed information on the procedure and the necessary documents. If one person still lives abroad, it is possible to file a request for entry so that he or she can take part in the marriage preparation procedure. If there is suspicion of a marriage of convenience (Scheinehe), the registry office may deny the marriage. In this case, even a marriage already completed can be declared invalid or the residence permit withdrawn.

Rights and Duties

Spouses have equal rights and duties by law. Both spouses must marry by choice. If authorities discover that a person has been forced into marriage (Zwangsheirat), the marriage may be declared invalid and the person who exercised coercion may be prosecuted. People who feel forced into marriage should ask for help. The counselling centre zwangsheirat.ch offers a free telephone hotline (0800 800 007) for this purpose.

Family Planning

For questions about family planning, pregnancy and sexuality, there are special advisory centres in Liestal and Binningen in Canton Basel-Landschaft. The centres offer anonymous and, in some cases, free information on topics such as birth control, sexual issues, unwanted pregnancy, or sexually transmitted diseases. They also consult future parents and people with children.

Divorce

A divorce can be requested by both spouses or by one spouse alone. The district courts (Zivilkreisgerichte) are responsible. Marriages that have been performed abroad can also be divorced in accordance with Swiss law. In order to do so, you must have lived in Switzerland for at least one year and Switzerland must be your main place of residence. Divorce may have an impact on residency status or on an ongoing naturalisation process. Whether or not non-citizens may remain in Switzerland after the divorce depends on several factors. Special rules apply to victims of domestic violence. A marriage and family counselling centre or a legal service provide further information on divorce.

Parents' Rights and Duties

When a child is born, the birth must be immediately reported to the registry office. While married couples gain custody automatically, unmarried couples have to take care of custody themselves.

Notice of Birth

The registry office (Zivilstandsamt) must be notified whenever a child is born. Attention: the place of birth, not the parents' community of residence defines which registry office is responsible. The hospital sends the documents to the responsible registry office when a child is born in hospital. A parent must give notice of birth within three days of a birth outside of hospital (e.g. at home). The responsible registry office provides information regarding the required documents. Children born in Switzerland do not automatically obtain Swiss citizenship.

Acknowledging Paternity

When married couples have a child, the husband is automatically registered as the father. Should the husband doubt that he is the father, he can dispute paternity in court. Unmarried fathers are not automatically registered as fathers. An unmarried father can have paternity acknowledged before or after birth at the registry office. Should the father refuse to acknowledge paternity, the mother can demand acknowledgement in court.

Parental Authority

It is a parent's right and duty to care for their child (elterliche Sorge). This includes education and financial support. Parents represent their children legally until they have reached the age of 18. Married parents automatically have the same rights and duties in relation to their child. Unmarried fathers must first acknowledge paternity. Afterwards, the parents can make a written declaration of joint custody (gemeinsame elterliche Sorge). This can be done with acknowledgement at the registry office or later at the district's child protection authority (Kindesschutzbehörde, KESB). Should unmarried couples be unable to reach a custody agreement, the child protection authority will decide. People with questions or in need of support may contact a responsible counselling centre.

Maintenance

Parents who have separated are both still obligated to care for their child (maintenance, Unterhalt). For this reason, they should reach an agreement on the financial support and care of their child. Child support contributions are to be made by mother and father. If and how much a parent must financially contribute depends on their economic situation and on how involved they are in the supervision of the child. If an agreement cannot be reached, a court may be involved. If a parent is unwilling to contribute financially, the community of residence can help. This includes support in demanding payment and/or advancing maintenance payments where there is an entitlement (Alimentenbevorschussung).

Being a Parent

Raising a child is demanding. Many parents ask themselves at various times what is best for their child. Sharing experiences with other parents can be very valuable. In addition, there are various helpful counselling centres.

Meeting Points

There are many opportunities for mothers and fathers to exchange experiences with other parents or to take part in activities with their child. Several opportunities are provided to enable Swiss and foreign parents to get to know each other.

- For infants and toddlers up to age 2 there are playgroups (Krabbelgruppen) where parents can make contact as well.
- Parent-child gymnastics (MuKi-/VaKi-/EIKi-Turnen) offer games, fun, and exercise for parents and their children. Gymnastics are offered in most communities.
- Family centres (Familienzentrum) host various events for parents and their children.
- Libraries have offers for younger and older children and their parents.

Inquiring about the numerous regional opportunities at the communities of residence is always worthwhile.

Parental Education

In Canton Basel-Landschaft, parents can take classes on a wide variety of topics. There are classes that specialise in addressing immigrants' needs. For example, there are classes on the Swiss school system. Some classes are offered in foreign languages. The website "Elternbildung Baselland," schools, and the community of residence provide additional information about different offers.

Educational Counselling

Persons with questions regarding children's education can turn to various information centres. All regions have family counselling centres. In addition, mother and father counselling (Mütter- und Väterberatung) is available in various communities, including questions regarding infant care. The parent helpline works with a trained staff that counsels parents on the phone or via email (telephone 0848 35 45 55 (fixed network tariff), www.elternnotruf.ch).

Childcare

Many fathers and mothers continue working after their child is born. For this reason, there are special childcare options in Canton Basel-Landschaft. Most of them charge a fee.

Day-Care Centres (KITA)

Children are supervised throughout the day at day-care centres (Kinderkrippen). Most offers are for children from three months of age until school age. Some day-care centres do supervise school age children (before and after school and at lunchtime). Waiting lists are long and parents must enroll their children early. Costs vary and some communities help pay for them. The day-care centres or the communities have additional information on enrollment and costs.

Playgroups

Many children attend playgroups (Spielgruppe) before they reach school age. In these playgroups children over the age of approximately 3 meet without their parents to play, do crafts, etc. with a trained supervisor. Particularly for children who do not speak German at home the playgroup is a good opportunity to become exposed to the German language. This facilitates entering school. Costs vary and some communities help pay for playgroups. There are playgroups in almost all communities. The community of residence will provide further information on enrollment and costs.

Day Schools / School Lunch

Some schools offer supervision outside of classes. Children can stay at school during lunchtime if their school has a day school programme (Tagesstruktur). There they will be given a lunch. After school they can do their homework under supervision. These programmes must be paid for by parents. The costs often depend on parents' income. The child can benefit from the programme on one or more days a week. Day school programmes are not to be confused with day schools (Tagesschulen) where children must participate in day school 5 days a week.

Day Families

Day families (Tagesfamilien) are families that care for children for a certain amount of time (usually the whole day). This childcare service is popular amongst working parents. There are services that help parents find suitable day families and that will provide information on average costs.

Babysitters / Emergency Situations

In Switzerland, young people are often employed as babysitters for evenings or weekends. The Swiss Red Cross (SRK) Baselland keeps a list of babysitting services that work with sitters who have attended a babysitting class. It is common to pay young people for their time. In unpredictable emergency situations, the Swiss Red Cross (SRK) Baselland runs an emergency childcare service, for example, when a parent must go to hospital and no other form of childcare is available. The service is not free of charge, but costs are covered by some health insurance policies.

Family Reunification

Family members of persons living in Switzerland can move to Switzerland under certain circumstances. If family or friends want to visit they might have to apply for a visa depending on the country of origin.

Family Reunification

In principle, there is the possibility of family members (direct relatives or spouses) of people living in Switzerland being able to move here (family reunification, Familiennachzug). Which family members can apply depends on the citizenship and residence status of the applicant. Provisionally admitted foreigners (permit F) can also apply under certain circumstances. The cantonal Office for Migration and Citizenship (Amt für Migration und Bürgerrecht) examines the application and informs applicants of necessary documents and procedures. Attention: family reunification must be applied for within a certain period of time. This period of time is shorter for children than it is for adults (e.g. spouses).

Marriage Preparation

People living in Switzerland and wishing to marry a partner who lives abroad can apply for an entry permit for marriage preparation (Vorbereitung der Heirat). This permit allows the partner to enter Switzerland before the marriage and to get married here. The cantonal Office for Migration and Citizenship (Amt für Migration und Bürgerrecht) examines the application and informs applicants of necessary documents and procedures.

Entry Visa

For residents of many countries it is not easy to receive an entry visa for Switzerland, for example, in order to visit family. A letter of invitation and/or financial guarantee (Verpflichtungserklärung) issued by the Swiss resident might be necessary. The Swiss representation abroad examines the application and informs applicants of necessary documents and procedures. The Office for Migration and Integration (Amt für Migration und Integration) also provides information.

Conflicts

When there is a conflict in a partnership or family various counselling services can help. Violence in families and between spouses is illegal.

Conflicts in Partnerships

Partners can turn to professional help (Eheberatung) when there is a conflict in the partnership. Specialized counselling services help to find solutions. Generally, first consultations are free of charge or discounted. Every region has a responsible counselling service.

Conflicts in Families

Families with children may face difficult situations from time to time. These burden both parents and children. Parents are strongly advised to ask for help when they are at a loss for how to proceed. Family counselling services (Familienberatungsstelle) offer personal consultations. The parent helpline has a trained staff that counsels parents with questions regarding child-rearing or who are worried about their children on the phone or via email (telephone 0848 35 45 55 (free), www.elternnotruf.ch). Children and young people can call, email, text, or chat with the child helpline (Kindernotruf) (telephone 147 (free), www.147.ch).

Domestic Violence

Violence in families is an official crime. People who perform a violent act are liable to prosecution, regardless of the severity of the act. No difference is made between violence directed at the spouse and violence directed at children. Authorities must take action when they become aware of domestic violence. Victims of violence can turn to free and confidential support services. Special housing (Frauenhaus / Väterhaus) is available for women or men and their children who need temporary protection. Women can call a women's shelter at any hour (telephone 061 681 66 33). Children and young people can contact the child helpline (Kindernotruf) (telephone 147 (free), www.147.ch). People who feel threatened by a family member should call the police (telephone 117). The police can order a person who has performed a violent act, or is threatening to do so, to stay away from an apartment or house for an extended period of time.
